SYNOPSIS:

ACT 1.—Freshman Year.

Scene 1—Mrs. O'Brien's boarding house. The arrival of the "Waywards." "Just tell the president that you want to enter the Oratory department."

Scene 2—A street. Good resolutions. [Five weeks elapse between Scenes 1 and 2.]

Scene 3—Boarding house. Work of the "Waywards." "It was an ocular delusion."

ACT 2.—Sophomore Year.

Scene 1—Boarding house. Eve of the first Academy ball. "Come forth, thou spirits of Dixie-land."

Scene 2—Street. "Hic—the stars were so full, and the moon sparkled so brightly."

Scene 3—The senior's duty. Domestic visitors. "Waywards" in the toils.

Scene 4—Boarding house. The reformation. "Stella, we promise."

ACT 3.—Junior Year.

Scene 1—The girls' study. "I hope he's all right, little girl; but don't get a broken heart out of this." Serenade.

Scene 2—Bachelor's quarters. The temptation. Resistance.

Scene 3—Girls' study. The betrayer. "Stop, Sina! You must not, shall not go." "She is my wife, and goes with me." Foiled.

"All in line there! Bring the cane down with the left foot."

Scene 2—Garden scene, Founder's Day, (p.m.)
"The Persians could not reach our Athens." "See here, this is all that's left of my cane—"

But though so changed, we still do honor thee

And ever shall through all eternity "

Scene 3—Study room. "Oh this blessed Thesis, it has weighed down on me like an incubus." "Now, Alchemy, yield up thy hidden truths."

Scene 4—Male Quartette, "The White and the Blue."

President's address.

Oration.

Class Poem.

Class History.

Valedictory.

Another Vanderbilt scion has married a chorus girl, and the Chicago Chronicle thinks that the trouble is not with the rich young men of New York, but with the rich young women. "It says: "They must be hopelessly homely or hopelessly stupid, else they would never allow themselves to be cut out by chorus girls."
